Tom's Tips

Hello Folks,
Well I did it, I finished up my touring season by summiting

Mt. Washington in New Hampshire. Actually, I took the Cog Train the first 6,275 feet then hiked the last 13 feet. I know what you are thinking, that's not so high. It holds the record for the fastest ground level wind speed in North America at 235 MPH. Pretty cold (38) and windy (42mph) the day I was there, especially for someone from Florida.

While I was away I could not help but watch the weather back here as hurricane Michael grew into a monster as it made its way up the Gulf. What a path of destruction it left in its wake in North Florida and Georgia. We were the lucky ones once again, dodging another bullet. Always remember that it is better to evacuate from a storm in vain than to stay put and take the wrath of a monster storm. Always error on the safe side.
